

THREE BIOSPHERE ECO-CITY (BEC) PRINCIPLES

1. One Focus – Human Interaction with the Environment

BEC addresses people and the environment together, to achieve harmony. There is no social or political agenda. Just an essential focus on engaging people in a culture of sustainability, to create a unified human-environmental system.

Photo: Hakan Hu on Pexels

2. One Table to Welcome Everyone

BEC welcomes everyone to its forums. Participation is democratic, and ideas are freely given. There is no lobbying for certain points of view. People can have different beliefs, but in a BEC discussion they find areas in which they can cooperate to address sustainability together.

Photo: Christina Morilla on Pexels

3. One Region – With Urban-Rural Coordination

Urban-rural fringe. Photo: J. Birtch

In cities, resources flow between urban and rural parts. In some cities, rural areas provide resources but receive pollution and waste in return. Positive flows – investment, communication etc. – should replace these. BEC promotes urban-rural coordination to balance urban-rural benefits. Both areas can achieve sustainability together.